

Dan Brooks

Dan Brooks is serving as the 2016-2017 Public Lands Transportation Scholar at the John Heinz National Wildlife Refuge. Dan studied anthropology and philosophy at the University of Rochester before earning a Master of City and Regional Planning at the Edward J. Bloustein School of Planning and Public Policy at Rutgers University. During graduate school, Dan gained valuable experience in multi-modal transportation planning and research that he is eager to put to use on the Refuge. An avid outdoor enthusiast and urban cyclist, Dan is excited to return to Philadelphia to help improve equitable transportation access in a city he loves. In addition to the outdoors and being on a bike, Dan loves corny jokes, being active, and sweeping vistas.
