Apart from living in Mexico for eight months and traveling abroad for almost a year, I have spent my whole life in Chicago. I finished my B.S. in Economics at Northeastern Illinois University and I am currently working on my Master's in Urban Planning and Policy (specializing in transportation) at the University of Illinois at Chicago. I've gained some transportation planning experience while interning at the Active Transportation Alliance and the Pace Suburban Bus Company. The Transportation Scholar position at the San Diego National Wildlife Refuge truly marries my passion for preserving the natural environment with my career aspirations in alternative transportation. As a current bicycle and transit commuter, I hope to help people transition into cleaner, healthier alternative modes of transportation.
