

Ma'ayan Dembo

Ma'ayan is a current National Park Service Transportation Fellow, focusing on transit planning for large parks. Ma'ayan looks forward to working with the NPS in making parks more accessible. Previously, she served at the California Department of Transportation, and City of Los Angeles's Department of Transportation, on bicycle and pedestrian safety. Prior to her graduate studies, she worked in transportation demand management, shifting commuter behavior from single-occupancy driving to alternative forms of transport. She holds a B.A. in Urban Studies from Stanford University, and a Master of Urban and Regional Planning from UCLA. In her free time, she enjoys gardening, hiking, and reading science fiction books.
